The purified aspartic protease from Candida albicans has been analysed in terms of the enzyme activity (Michaelis constant, K_m 1.3×10^{-3} M and turnover number, K_{cat} 1.9 s^{-1}) and the rate of formation of the inactive and low-molecular-mass forms, respectively. The inactive form could be generated by limited proteolysis at high pH, indicating that part of the substrate binds within the aspartic protease active site. The low-molecular-mass form was generated by thermal inactivation at 82157476af
